SELF-AWARENESS STRATEGY

B. Mamaradjabova

Abstract: This article describes the content of the strategy of self-awareness, the importance of the strategy of self-awareness in the development of personality. Factors in the formation of self-awareness strategies were analyzed.

Keywords: self-awareness, self-awareness strategy, personality, competent personality.

Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers of the Republic of Uzbekistan dated June 7, 2019 No 472 "On measures to further improve the system of training in the field of psychology and prevention of delinquency in society": "Despite the scale of work in the field of psychology there are still a number of problems. shown. In particular, as a result of insufficient psychological services to the population, social and psychological problems in society, including family problems (divorces, family conflicts, parent-child relationships, incest, premature birth), dependence on the negative effects of "popular culture", suicide Assassinations continue." [1]

In our case, the implementation of all of the above tasks can be achieved through the perfect formation of self-awareness strategies in young people. Young people should be seen as an integral part of society and a unique group. Because without knowing human psychology and its characteristics, integration and social construction cannot be achieved. Its formation, its self-awareness, must be analyzed within this society, based on its internal characteristics.[2]

The strategy of self-awareness is a psychological phenomenon that expresses the individual himself, those around him, society and the processes that take place in it, his participation and place in social processes, and the corresponding moral attitude. Educational and pedagogical interaction, taking into account the psychological characteristics of the individual, creates a strategy of self-awareness in a person. Hence, the formation of an individual's self-awareness strategy depends in many ways on social influences.

The earlier a person's self-awareness strategy is awakened, the sooner a personal perspective will emerge, feeling their behavior, controlling their actions, and evaluating their negative and positive traits. However, in the process of an individual's development, the occurrence of different situations in his or her life, getting to know people, different directions and different levels of relationships with them affect the strategy of self-awareness. For example, for a person with an internal attitude to events and happenings in his life, external circumstances can affect his internal self-awareness strategy and lead him to act according to the situation in the future. However, a person with a strong self-awareness strategy tends not to change his point of view even in different situations, but rather to strengthen his personal views. From this it can be concluded that the existence of levels of self-awareness strategy, only a high level of self-awareness can lead to the formation of a person with a strong conscious attitude to himself, people, events.

Alfred Adler, a representative of psychoanalytic theory in the history of psychology, argues that "people have the ability to improve themselves and the world through self-awareness." The strategy of self-awareness is a state of mind, in which attention is focused on oneself, one's personal position, which increases one's sensitivity to one's personal attitudes and dispositions.

It is well known that the most important of the characteristics of a well-rounded person is responsibility. This feature is directly related to the level of self-awareness strategy of the individual. Responsibility is rounded up in the true mental activity of a person's social behavior. The psychological level of the analysis of the concept of responsibility encompasses the spiritual origin of the individual, who is considered the internal manager of human social behavior.[3]

Spiritual values, direction of control, self-assessment, feedback, assessment of emotional state, social order, etc. can be included as components of the strategy of self-awareness. They complement each other, radically change a person's view of social activism, and ensure the formation of self-awareness strategy functions.

THE EFFECT OF THE FAMILY, THE TEACHER, AND THE EXTERNAL ENVIRONMENT IN THE RAISING OF THE CHILD

D. Nasoyidinova

Abstract: Children, who are the foundation of our future development, their education and upbringing are important to us. In this article, I tried to highlight the role of the family, the teacher, the external environment in the upbringing of children, and the views of Eastern and Western thinkers on this issue, how parents should pay attention to the child.

Keywords: parent, child, teacher, moral education, ability, incompetence, pedagogical views, society.

As the First President said in his book "High Spirituality is an Invincible Force": "Everything we do today is determined not only by the wealth and property of our children. A polite, knowledgeable, and intelligent, hard-working, faithful child is the wealth not only of the parents, but also of the society.
